

Limbo Land

The dreaded and paralyzing world of limbo land.

Being trapped in this unenviable place opens a person up to a whole new world of potential pain and emotional damage. Not to mention leaving one with an inability to get on with their lives and move forward.

No matter how long you were with your partner, no matter how much you love them, no matter how much they promise you that the two of you will get back together some day, limbo land is not a place you want to allow yourself to wander.

If your ex-partner truly wanted to be with you, then they would never have broken it off in the first place. Sure, maybe they could have made a mistake and want you back; but it's not likely. Anyway, how long are you prepared to wait around to find this out? How much of your valuable time and life do you want to waste being stuck in a realm of emptiness and further confusion?

Believe me, limbo land is a very frustrating place. I've been there. Don't make the error of falling into this trap just because it feels too hard to let go.

Often it's a case of the other partner wishing to keep their options open. They want to see who else they can find, and if that doesn't work out, they know they will have you there waiting to fall back on. Comforting for them, not so comforting for you.

Do you really want to be that person? Second, third, tenth choice? No, you don't. You deserve far better than that.

If you find yourself falling into this trap, if your ex is keeping you hooked in with false promises of hope, get out of limbo land as fast as you can. Ignore the feelings that will fight and struggle against your decision.

You have to get out of that scenario. It's soul destroying.